

Which Road Will We Take?

There are so many people today that do what makes THEM happy. They live in sin, they shun the Word of God and yet they say that they love God and believe they are going to Heaven. They don't want to be judged, they don't want to be shown a better way to live, they only want to do what THEY want to do and what the Bible says and what Christians say does not matter to them.

There are two roads that everyone, as individuals, has to choose from. The first road appeals to the people that were discussed a moment ago. It promises happiness, it promises freedom, it promises that you can do what you want to do and no one can stop you. If we are honest with ourselves, it sounds nice. It sounds like a road I would like to take, but its end is not as pleasant as its promises. Its end is eternal torment, separated from God, a place that was meant for demons and Satan himself to face their punishment for rebelling against God.

The second is less appealing. To take this road you have to give up everything, its too narrow to take anything with you. You must be willing to carry a cross on this road and it will be heavy. You must be willing to deny who you are and live as though you have died and Christ is now living in you. This is a road of self-sacrifice. It sounds unpleasant and makes the other road that much more appealing, but this road offers something much better than the first. Even though you give up everything to walk down this road, at the end, you will be given everything. At the end of this road is a home in Heaven where you will spend eternity.
